Organized by	COAST in cooperation with CCNF and Oxfam
Objectives	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>(i) To have ideas on planning for Rohingya response, particularly on how to keep them busy for ensuring their human dignity until the repatriation and also integration of humanitarian and development aspects, considering totality and locality of Coxsbazar.</li> <li>(ii) To get the perspective of national and international stakeholders especially of national CSO and NGO network leaders.</li> <li>(iii) To draw attention on aid transparency for greater public participation for more effectiveness and value for the money and to cope with any possible dwindling aid situation.</li> <li>(iv) To draw different perspectives on Grand Bargain commitments including localization and to propose possible approaches to integrate into Rohingya response.</li> <li>(v) To review the present response structure and to propose possible effective approach in respect of coordination, accountability and participation.</li> </ul>
Background	Bangladesh has been hosting around 1.2 million Rohingya refugees in Cox’s Bazar. On the one hand, there is a challenge in keeping development pace of the district, one of the less developed districts in Bangladesh in terms of several development indicators. Another challenge is maintaining the human dignity of Rohingya refugees. There is no doubt that for all stakeholders the implementation of Right to Return of the refugees is first – UN agencies and neighboring countries are trying their best in this regard. But until their dignified, safe and sustainable return, Bangladesh and Cox’s Bazar society should do the best to contribute to the Rohingya living with human dignity. There is a dwindling aid situation and moreover a pressure on the natural resource, economy of the district along with other pressures on the local society, which are creating a lot of concern due to sudden upsurge in demographic imbalance and also due to aid worker influx. UN agencies, donor countries and INGOs (International Non-Government Organizations) have already committed to applying the new ways of working globally which has been outlined in Grand Bargain, Charter 4 Change and QCPR 2018. The essence of those commitments are sustainability, effective coordination, simplicity of monitoring and management for reducing transaction cost, accountability to the affected populations, as well as putting actors like local NGOs / CSOs and local government in the driving seat. All above, need to work with three nexus, i.e. humanitarian, development and peace. Since the beginning of Rohingya influx (August 2017) CCNF (Cox’s Bazar CSO NGO Forum, www.cxb-cso-ngo.org) have been campaigning for the implementation of GB and C4C thereby localization in cooperation with ISCG and other INGOs with the approach of positive engagement and dialogue. A mission from Geneva GB localization team have visited and given a report with several proposals on how to proceed in respect of localization. CCNF and COAST also did one survey in this regard in the beginning of 2018. And again, we did another survey recently and study to cover the changed scenario. There are several good achievements with respect to the Rohingya response, especially the fact that

	there were no casualties during last monsoon, stabilization of lands and shelters etc. However, there are still several concerns with respect to facilitating human dignity and protection to the refugee communities, including addressing issues with the host community. Response process / structure is also a concern in this regard, namely how we can adopt a solidarity / whole of society approach, especially involving local government, local agency officials, local NGOs and CSOs. On top of localization of the response, there are questions on (1) how other commitments of the Grand Bargain could be taken forward, especially pertaining to tracking and public transparency of aid so that the people can participate and propose best value for money, (2) how coordination could be made with authority and inclusiveness so that there will be no duplication and ensuring quality of services, (3) how there will be wider scope for participation and how accountability could be made so that the refugee population and host community have greater access and last but not least (4) how development issues of Cox's Bazar could be addressed so that negative impact on its environment and economic issues will be addressed.
